

H&R Block's Refund Advance remains great way for qualifying filers to get access to up to $3,000, even during a government shutdown

Getting return into IRS queue is key to getting refund faster

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 20, 2018 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Despite the federal government shutdown, H&R Block (NYSE:HRB) will continue to assist the millions of taxpayers who want their tax refund as soon as possible, or need to submit their 2017 tax returns by April 17. For taxpayers who want access to money faster than the IRS can provide a tax refund, H&R Block continues to offer the Refund Advance^{*}, which offers taxpayers a loan against their refund of up to $3,000 after filing their taxes, even while the IRS remains closed.

"Just because the IRS isn't operating as normal, don't wait to prepare your return. We are well prepared to help you throughout the shutdown. And those who file earliest will be first in line for refunds once the IRS resumes normal operations," said Kathy Pickering, vice president of regulatory affairs and executive director of The Tax Institute at H&R Block. "The Refund Advance remains a great way for qualifying filers to get access to up to $3,000 even though there's a shutdown."

In addition, H&R Block advises taxpayers that the tax deadline is still April 17 and will not change. Filing their returns electronically remains the recommended method taxpayers use to submit their returns because it aids timely processing. If taxpayers choose to file a paper return, they should be sure to get the returns postmarked by April 17 and get a receipt. Paper returns will take longer to process than e-filed returns.
